ABSTRACT

Conflicts, characterized by mistrust, suspicion, tension and hostility between individuals, groups or even nations are inevitable and inherent in human communication. Forms, causes, duration, outcomes, and effects of the conflicts which may not always be destructive vary but it is up to the disputants’ wisdom to deal with them to achieve amicable solutions. This thesis aimed to unveil interpersonal conflicts that disrupt interpersonal communication in the Malay society. It hoped to unveil the disputants, types, motives of conflicts and the way they dealt with the arising issues. The inclusion of gender was to establish an understanding of the types and degree of conflicts between Malay men and women and those of the same gender. It would be worthwhile to also investigate if interracial conflict was apparent. Gender issues in relation to inequality and power inequity were also embodied as part of the study. As real conflicts are difficult to capture, two sets of 19 classic and the contemporary Malay films were deployed. In order for the two conflict taxonomies to be established, Spradley’s illustrated in Kalbfleisch (1993) conflict model was consulted as it is important to know what types of conflicts emerge when one is caught in a difficult situation with another party. Some modifications were made to suit the context. Amartya Sen’s (2001) gender inequality model was then applied to examine the gender issues. The results include two conflict taxonomies representing the two eras revealing both similarities and differences. The majority of the conflicts portrayed are of the destructive issues and that both the genders do contribute to the disputes in the Malay society; the highest being between family members and Malay men are shown to be the biggest perpetrators of conflicts in interpersonal communication in the two eras. Malay women do face discrimination and inequality although they are bold and daring enough to make themselves heard and they fight for their rights. Interracial conflicts are shown to occur merely at work or professional levels involving more males than females. There is however a gradual move towards constructive conflict resolutions.
ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

It is an honour for me to thank my supervisor, Prof. Dr. Azizul Halim Yahya, whose ceaseless encouragement and motivation have brought me to the ultimate completion of this thesis. His unrelenting support and guidance have enabled me to develop a thorough and discerning view and understanding not only of the subject matter but the larger picture of the world and reality as a whole.

I owe my deepest gratitude to University Teknologi MARA (UiTM) for giving me the trust and granting me the very much needed study leave without which I would not have had tremendous space, time and opportunity to pick up the pieces in order to move on at a much greater speed.

I am indebted to the administrators of International Education Centre (INTEC), the Faculty of Communication and Media Studies and Centre of Post Graduate Studies, UiTM (IPSIS) for their understanding, support and encouragement.

It is also a pleasure to thank some of my former students, Hasna, Dia, to name a few… for their warm support and kind assistance.

Thanks to you Dave for your words of encouragement and offer to be a voluntary proofreader. Finally you get a chance to read my thesis in its entirety.

Lastly, I would like to express my love and gratitude to my family who have been patiently waiting for this moment together. We finally did it!
