

CAUSATIVE FACTORS IN CRIMINAL BEHAVIOUR
AND THE EXTENT TO WHICH THE COURTS TAKE THESE FACTORS INTO CONSIDERATION IN SENTENCING THE ACCUSED.

BY:

ROOS NIZA MOHD SHARIFF

ITM I/C: 84II9537

SUBMITTED IN PARTIAL FULFILMENT
OF THE REQUIREMENT FOR THE DIPLOMA IN LAW

AT THE

MARA INSTITUTE OF TECHNOLOGY
SHAH ALAM, SELANGOR.

OCTOBER, 1987

ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

This project paper has been the subject of unsteady and hesitating starts. Its completion would not have been achieved but for the help and assistance of many people. It is not possible to list them all down but below are stated whom the writer is extremely grateful:

1. To Mr. Vijay Gopal, who happens to be the writer's Supervisor; for all his assistance, guidance, co-operation, understanding and also for the inspiration and help in laying out the basic material to work on.
2. To Mr. Tharmalingam, the Course Tutor of Diploma In Law and Mr. N. Mahendran, Lecturer, who have given me encouragement and providing relevant materials.
3. To the tremendous effort of Cik Noraini Othman and Cik Sofiah Ismail who have helped the writer in typing this project paper with a splendid job.
4. Last, but not least, to my family who has given me financial and moral support needed to complete this project paper.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	PAGE
PREFACE	i
ACKNOWLEDGEMENT	ii
TABLE OF CONTENTS	iii-iv
SYNOPSIS	v
PRELUDE	I
Introduction
Definition
CHAPTER ONE	4
Nature And Scope
CHAPTER TWO	12
Theories And Explanation
Common Sense And Science
Sources
Biogenic
Psychogenic
Sociogenic
Theories In Criminology
CHAPTER THREE	45
Criminal Justice
A. The Trial: Determination of Guilt or Innocence

SYNOPSIS

When a crime is committed, justice must be done. However, though it is easy to create an appearance of justice, mere appearance may turn out to be only an illusion.

Those who commit crimes must be brought to justice. But who can be 'labeled' as 'criminal' and how is justice done? Most important, who is authorized to make a valid label on a particular person? Is there any such thing as labeling a person under a certain category?

There is immense danger in labeling a person because it effects his life. Through their crimes, even ordinary men become public figures and may even find a place in history, while a public figure accused of crime can be even more widely known than their career.

Ideas about the causes of crime and remedies rooted in these ideas succeed one another. However, these causes are not widely recognized in modern civilized society where one method of dealing with crime which is known as criminal justice is used.

This project paper is to introduce the theories regarding the causative factors in criminal behaviour which embracing

CHAPTER ONE.

NATURE AND SCOPE.

NATURE.

Those who break social rules of one kind and another are seen as distinct kinds of people, set apart from non-deviants, been markedly different from others and alien among others.

One does not has to go very far as to see what is happening around us. One's own surrounding and the people will show that if a person do something outside the acceptable norms in the society, that person will be treated as different from other people and if that certain act happens to be not acceptable by the law, then, that person is considered as acted against the law. This already put the said person under the category of a criminal.

However, the most interesting, but unluckily, unpopular, is the internal reaction of a person when confronting certain people or event. There are a lot of questions which bring us to the developmental of the mind of human being and his behaviour.

As known, behaviour of one person is different from the other. The manner of behaving is sometimes fixed and became the personality of the person which is difficult for him to change. A good example is an Indian man from