PURPOSE OF Homecoming

The concept of inviting back former members or graduates of an organisation to commemorate the existence of the group is known as a "homecoming". Whether they are in high school or university, many students' favourite period of the academic year is homecoming. How come homecoming is such a huge deal though?

It was designed to fit the social norms of both high schools and colleges and, in the end, reflects the university's cultures and beliefs. Homecoming not only honours alumni but also gives them a chance to display university spirit and reminisce about happy times spent at the university with current students.

It's a great chance to socialise with other students, teachers, and—most importantly—alumni! Festivities are a lot of fun and provide the ideal setting for casual, no-pressure networking. Not only that, the alumni may have more stories tell to the others. It can make bond more tight.

No matter how far away the alumni are from their current connections, the idea of a solid connection and bond between the two parties will make the distance seem much closer.

Relationship, which indicates connectedness, caring for one another, and a desire for a stronger union between two or more parties, is actually believed to be the most beautiful thing on earth. In this instance, the alumni have a lifelong link.

Mentoring current students or prospective alumni at the university is another way that alumni can give back. Additionally, they are able to place students in their businesses or agencies for industrial training. It is obvious that this collaboration would encourage a win-win scenario and strengthen the bond between the two sides.
