

MASTER OF ACCOUNTANCY: WHY SHOULD I GET A MASTER'S DEGREE?

DR. SITI HALIZA ASAT

A master's degree is an advanced academic degree that can be earned after completing a bachelor's degree. Deciding whether to get a master's degree is a personal decision that depends on many factors. However, believe me, pursuing a master's degree can be a worthwhile investment in the future.

I give you four (4) reasons why you should get a Master Degree Certification:

Expanded Knowledge and Expertise

A master's degree is an advanced program of study that delves deeper into that specialty area. You may expand your knowledge in the field and keep abreast of the latest changes in your field. More knowledge means that you may become an expert in your field, leading you to become a better leader.

Enhance Your Capabilities

By taking advanced coursework and conducting research, the program helps develop and enhance your capabilities in analytical and critical thinking skills, communication skills, and time management. Not only that, it demonstrates perseverance, tenacity, intellectual prowess, a higher level of confidence, more self-motivation, and the capacity to deal with difficult situations, all of which are desirable attributes in managers, executives, etc.

A Sense of Personal Accomplishment

A master's degree is certainly an achievement of which you should be proud of. You may earn additional value and credibility, which invites a greater sense of respect in the workplace as well as in the community. Receiving a master's will not only give you a greater sense of confidence in your academic prowess but will also lead you into positions of leadership.

Greater Career Opportunities

By completing a master's program, you will develop advanced skills and knowledge in your field. These will qualify you for higher-level positions. You may have a chance to become an educator, like a lecturer, in any higher learning institution and may have the opportunity to pursue a doctoral degree.
