Rawnaq al Warda

Expressing art in watercolor specifically makes me immersed and dissolved in the world that you create by yourself. You would never get the same result no matter how much you tried to paint it again, it's a playful nature beyond your creativity.

When I am stressing over something, and get my emotion into the deep dark, painting is the only thing I could focus on, making me distracted and focus on remaking a piece of art. A wise man said, "you must be the master of your emotions if you wish to live in peace, for he who can control himself, becomes free". Remaking these blooming roses makes me achieve moments of peace and tranquility.
