

ABSTRACT

Ethics has been a vital ingredient in any human being's life especially for Asian people. Many universities have attempted to address the importance of being ethical by making a course and activities on ethics. The study has examined the differences of ethical standard level between both genders from Bachelor of Administrative Science (Hons.), faculty of Administrative Science and Policy Studies. Our respondent consists of 80 students of the faculty and the questions are divided into three main sections. We are looking at the moderators, which are the parents' education level and the course's part as well as on the respondent's ethical belief and whether these beliefs are being put into their daily life applications and practices. From this research, we found out that gender and mother's education level does effect on the ethical standard of the respondents. Frankly, by referring to page 36, 37 and 39, we can see that the male respondents are more ethical than the female respondents and mother's education level plays a role in the respondents' ethical standard.
