ABSTRACT

Malaysia is one of the most beautiful countries in this world. The beautiful environment with multicultural heritage is the attractions. Historical buildings have significant cultural value and should be considered as precious structural monuments. Building conservation has long been a concern although its popular application is relatively recent in origin. Being custody of future generation, the obligation has to be fulfilled. However awareness in conservation still remains low.

How to increase the awareness? To educate public to be aware of the needs of conservation requires time. In the current situation, it is very difficult in a capitalistic economy where high materialism is looked as the key to success. There must be a balance between the Baggers for development whilst at the same time ensuring that the environment is well taken care of. Awareness in conservation has to be increased, starting with policy making and followed by the professional involvement in conservation projects with the right method and strong believe that our heritage, be preserved, the low quality and the public should be more supportive. The need for conservation in Malaysia
