ABSTRACT

The desire to be the best is high in Malaysian culture, especially when it involves beauty. As much other Asian markets, individuals do whatever it takes to appear smart and nice before others. This culture is one of the key reasons why they are high turn up in Mac Professional Hair Studio. Together with this culture, the society also care about the environment and health as the conventional salons often use harsh chemical and other treatments that are bad for the environment and may be dangerous for customers' health, especially those with chemical sensitives.

As awareness about the health and environmental benefits of green living rises, a growing number of people are seeking to go green in all aspects of their lives and one of those is an eco-friendly salon. Eco-friendly salon protect customers and staff from fumes and other hazardous substances by installing air filtration systems and using building materials and furnishings that minimize VOCs (Volatile Organic Compounds). To building materials and furnishings, some eco salons also use sustainable equipment such as bamboo brushes and combs, and green cleaning services or products. For the interior of the salon, everything from the flooring to the paint and the lighting are all-natural and sustainable. Reduce, reuse, recycle is a way of life for many green salons

The idea of the beauty salon is not a new one. In fact, going back to ancient civilizations, we can see that hairstyles and the people who loved them have been setting fashion trends for thousands of years. The definition of salon is an establishment where a hairdresser, beautician or couturier works. A salon is place that provide women with services to improve their beauty.
