I would like to thank to my lecturer Madam Norida binti Abu Bakar and Madam Siti Daleela binti Mohd Wahid who give an objective critic and spend much of their time guiding me through different stage of the research and express my deepest gratitude for her guidance and support through this research.

Next, not forgetting my deeply dedication is forwarded to my family for their spiritual and emotional support, encouragement and love. My heartiest thanks and gratitude is also addressing to my friends for their untiring in sharing ideas with me and concern with me. Without their support, my research will be not successful

Thank You

Abstract

This dissertation addresses the factor that lead to student satisfaction and what is the most significant factor that lead to student satisfaction during internship. According to Aksu and Koksai, internship is a preparation for students to do their internship by using their own knowledge and skill that they gain from their study. The problem rise when the students complain that they do not get what they totally deserved when doing internship. Students must create a balance between diverse internship experience and career specific courses for the student preparation to enter a real work situation (Brown, 2014). Therefore, several factors have been identified by the research in order to achieved student satisfaction which is payment, supervisor, relationship with co-worker, job itself and training and development.
