ABSTRACT

Export is very important to each country in the modern world. Due to increase the exports, Malaysia manufacturers continuously produced variety of products in diverse industry in order to compete with the foreign products which give high competition. Due to that circumstance, the purpose of this is study to examine empirically the impact of various factors on Malaysia export. The variables under consideration are Gross Domestic Product growth, exchange rate, and inflation rate. The data are taking annually from year 1993 to 2013 for each dependent and independent variables which total of observation is 20 years.

Econometric results suggest that export in Malaysia significant influenced by gross domestic product and exchange rate. While, inflation in Malaysia seem not significant to influenced export in Malaysia. Finally, it should be noted that the major limitation faced by this study were short time.
